The Network

In 1983, domestic violence service providers created The Network: Advocating Against Domestic Violence (previously known as the Chicago Metropolitan Battered Women's Network) in order to exchange information about local resources for domestic violence survivors and to share best practices in responding to their needs. The Network still maintains the grassroots focus of its early years, but it is now a coalition of over 40 domestic violence organizations, allied professionals, and community members serving domestic violence victims in Chicago and the Cook County region. The mission of the Network is to educate, organize, and advocate as a collaborative membership organization to end domestic violence and underlying oppression. The Network is leading the fight against domestic and gender-based violence through a first response to crisis with the Illinois State Domestic Violence Hotline, policy and systems advocacy, provision of sector wide training, and member and community engagement. As outlined in our policy platform, The Network seeks safety for all in our community and we stand for racial justice and equity. The recent events demonstrate the lack of safety that persists for Black and other diverse members of our community and the continuing work that must be done to address a larger mission. In addition, the Network convenes its members to address common policy initiatives and promote education and awareness of domestic violence throughout the Chicagoland area.

The Conference

The Network- Advocating against Domestic Violence is hosting its second two-day virtual conference - (Re) Claiming Our Love: Social Justice & Domestic Violence. The conference will continue to center critical conversations on social justice and equity approaches and frameworks that directly influence interventions and solutions for domestic violence and other forms of violence. However, this year, participants will have the opportunity to advance their understanding on models in the anti-violence and anti-oppression space that are focused on intersectionality, racial justice, abolition, decarceration and transformative justice to best serve survivors. Over the course of the two days, we hope to hear from activists, advocates and practitioners who are relentlessly using these approaches and models in their effort to create a violence-free world.
